Spanish America, that international boundaries should follow former colonial administrative boundaries. The Chamber was authorized to take into account, where pertinent, a provision of the 1980 Peace Treaty that a basis for delimitation is to be found in documents issued by Spanish authorities during the colonial period indicating jurisdictions or territorial limits, as well as other types of evidence.

With regard to the land boundary, the Chamber notes that while the Parties have indicated to which colonial administrative divisions they claim to have succeeded, they have not been able to produce legislative or similar material indicating the limits of such divisions. They have submitted titles concerning land grants by the Spanish Crown, in particular grants of commons to Indian communities, from which, they allege, the provincial boundaries can be deduced.
