Allow me to now turn to the specific work of the Commission. The Commission is currently working on a report on the impact of sea level rise on the world's coastal states and territories. The Commission is currently working on a report on the impact of sea level rise on the world's coastal states and territories.

Sea level rise is already a global problem that affects at least 70 States around the world,

The impacts are felt by the very existence of our people and the very existence of our people.

Indonesia therefore stands in solidarity with other archipelagic States to address the sea level rise that it deserves.

As we stand on the brink of potential changes, the role of the Commission

The Commission's work on sea level rise is a commitment to ensuring a just and equitable framework ahead.

At this juncture, the Commission is currently working on a report on the impact of sea level rise on the world's coastal states and territories.

If not handled carefully, it could alter zone limits and boundaries.

This will create a number of uncertainties.
