tradefindjustice?

This is a very broad question Full justice will never be made But symbolic measures (museums, moruments, menorials, education programs, affirmative action) and financial and material programs to redistribute wealth to the populations of African descent are palliative measures that can bring justice

What is your opinion about neuroning paintings and much stretch pict Native Americans or African Americans in a regative very?

Another bond question My quinion is that a cist expresentations of black and indigenous populations must be reexamined and reconsidered. They should not be displayed in the public spaces such as public buildings, schools, etc, without any explanation. The best option is to put these paintings and must simm seems where they can be contextualized. But ardceatebalance, but a enit we concerned that destruction of older heritage leads to forgetting and creates precedents in which man favoured views are barished from the public square?

Oredrationprogrames are at least 4 hrus long ard include a dep study of history of the Holocoust and of the Gerocide in Rwarda through first an interactive workshop then a visit to the core exhibition which is also obre in an interactive way (with an individual work book for each student) and finally add his fand corrections to present injustices. Part of correce exhibition speaks about lessons for to day-from the survivors themselves (those whose stories were explored in the exhibition, sometimes also those who the students meet and discuss with) and also looking at some of the drallengs. South Africa is facing to day. Ore of the drallengs we deal with is Ximph this and Africa his

It does take a lot of work as you rightly observed but generally speaking the students understand the correction, and the reflections we get from the man really critique in grander rounging. We are evaluating every programme and I will be happy to she evit in you examples from the evaluation we are conducting now of the first year since our quering (Mach 2019 Mach 2010).
