DEPUTY SECRETARY-GENERAL. IN REMARKS TO COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF

Followings the tex of UN DeputySecretary General Asha-Rose Migros remarks to the Commission on the Status of Women, in New York today 2 March:

I am honoured to be with you todayfor the opening of the fiftythird session of the Commission on the Status of Women. I take the portunity to assure you that the Secretary General and I are strong committed to gnder equity the empowerment of women and the important work of his Commission.

On myrigt, I see Mr.Sha ZikangUnder-S ecretaryGeneral for Economic and Social Affairs] who has also given tremendous support tegrider issues, and I welcome his participation.

I welcome the Commission's decision to focus the eqal sharing f responsibilities between women and men, including are-igning the contex of HIVand AIDS," as the priority theme for this session.

Imbalances and ineqalities in the sharing of responsibilities between women and men persist in both the private and public spheres, in relation to both paid and unpaid work. Most domestic and care work, for example, is donbywomen and igls in developed and developing countries alike.

reconciliation of work and family responsibilities for both women and men. This includes closing the gap in pay, increasing flexibility in working arrangements, providing better leave provisions and increasing the degree to which men take advantage of these provisions.

We must also develop innovative ways to eliminate gender stereotypes about the roles of women and men, beginning at an early age in homes, schools and communities, and engaging leaders in all walks of life.

Without proper social and rights protection, too many women continue to carry the heaviest burden in caring for those affected by HIV and AIDS. This is unjust and a serious form of discrimination, even a form of violence against them. Through his campaign, "UNite to End all Forms of Violence against Women and Girls", the Secretary-General is resolved to put an end to this scourge. A commitment he has reaffirmed yesterday as he was visiting the Kibati refugee camp near Goma in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Secretary-General continues to promote the message that violence against women is
